Adwoa carried him on her back to work farming, she placed him on a mat under some shady trees, when she returned Nana was mysteriously nowhere to be found. Adwoa became hysterical, she combed the area for about three hours,

She then saw four elders and pleaded with them to help her, one of the elders knew that Nana was favoured by the Ancestors but did not disclose his feelings.

After about five hours they decided to get a search party to help, they heard the cry of a baby under some trees, they rushed to the spot, to their amazement a portion under the tree had been cleared or swept neatly, their was a fragrant all over the area.

The Elder suggested going to the stream called Tesu to get water to offer the oracle for insight, the wind started blowing and amidst a loud cry a voice said "Bruku, Bruku"...don't go home, if so you violate the order and will miss something very dear to you. It was almost dark yet they managed to follow the voice under the trees, and there lay the Baby "Nana Abass" with his head resting on the feathers of a parrot .

White earth had been sprinkled all over his body, and taffia with cowries tied around his joints. The men were almost afraid to pick up the baby but not Adwoa his mother, she picked him up and took him home. When morning came she took the baby to consult the oracle for an explanation on what happened in the bush, the ancient oracle announced that she had come here with a baby who would grow up to be a prominent person, he instructed them to perform a series of rituals and prophesied that Nana would be able to consult with the ancestors and help not only the Ashanti people, but people every where.
